They announced this on the same day as their new single "Pom Poms." The brothers will hit up 25 cities in a little over a month — the tour ends Aug. 16.

The Jonas Brothers said this about the tour: "This tour is about re-connecting with our amazing fans, who have waited patiently for three years to hear new music from us. We can't wait to put on an incredible show for everyone!"

The Jonas Brothers quickly became America's beloved boy band when they stormed on the scene in 2005. The group consists of three brothers originally from Wyckoff, New Jersey: Nicholas (Nick), Paul and Joseph. Nick's career actually began at age 7 when he performed on Broadway. Four years later, while enjoying great success on the stage, Nick wrote a song called, "Joy to the World." This eventually led to a record deal for Nick. In 2005, Steve Greenberg, visionary president of Columbia Records, signed the brothers as a group act when he realized that not only did Nick have a great voice, but he had two talented brothers as well.
