It's still several months away, but band announcements are already being made for the 2015 edition of Warped Tour.

The Devil Wears Prada are the latest addition to the lineup of the annual festival, which kicks off its 20th year June 14 in Salt Lake City (watch a preview video above). TDWP will be playing the entire run, going through Aug. 3. They are Warped veterans, having played the tour three previous times: 2008, 2009 and 2011.

Some more bands may be announced in the coming months, but so far about 20 artists are confirmed for Warped 2014. The Devil Wears Prada's latest album '8:18' was released last year. In a recent interview with Loudwire, frontman Mike Hranica talked about the disc.

“I think every time we do a new record it reflects where we are at that point in our lives to a certain point,” Hranica says. “I mean, we are growing up. Chris and Jeremy are both married and Chris even has a child now. If you’re going to make real music then it has to reflect at least a little part of what you’re going through in life.” Hranica continues: “I think it all comes down to whether or not you want to make a product or piece of art. If you don’t let your life in, you’re just making a product, so be it and that’s fine. But that’s not us. We have things to say and so to not let our music reflect our life is just not within our process.”

Before Warped begins, TDWP will be traversing the globe, with concert dates scheduled for Asia and Europe, with one U.S. date in Grand Prairie, Texas on March 16.
