

With one show under his belt on the 2017 What the Hell Tour, Dierks Bentley has moved ahead with mapping out his summer. The “Black” hitmaker opened the trek to a sold-out crowd in Dayton, Ohio, with Cole Swindell and Jon Pardi opening, and has just added more dates with a stop at Jones Beach on June 23.

“The show [Thursday] night -- and even just being with Cole and Pardi hanging off stage the last few days -- has me so pumped for the rest of this year,” Dierks says. “There’s not a cooler feeling in the world than the love that country music fans pour out every night when you’re laying it all out on the stage.” “They are having the time of their lives, and we’re just getting lost in it together,” he adds. “The guys and I are never going to forget this tour and these fans and all the people helping us live out our dreams every night.”

You can get a little taste of the What the Hell Tour in a new video just posted to YouTube: