

Country star singer Chris Young has announced he will headline the "Town Ain't Big Enough World Tour 2020" with a stop at Jones Beach on Friday, Sept 11, 2020 - tix: <http://CHRISYOUNG.jonesbeach.com>

Scotty McCreery and rising star, Payton Smith, will joining Young on the tour as opening acts. Additionally, the singer has hand-selected several rising artists to join him on the road as a part of the Next From Nashville program. The tour takes its name from Young's duet with Lauren Alaina, "Town Ain't Big Enough." It's one of several released songs that are expected to be included on his upcoming eight studio album, Raised On Country. The release date for the new album has not been announced.

The Tennessee native will embark on his Town Ain't Big Enough World Tour 2020 this May, with Scotty McCreery joining him as direct support. Newcomer Payton Smith is also joining the tour, as well as Next From Nashville artists, allowing rising stars to join Young during various tour stops.. "Everyone has been asking about this year since the last tour ended, so I'm happy I finally get to tell everybody about these shows," Young shared in a statement. "The Town Ain't Big Enough Tour is gonna be the biggest one yet!"

The tour announcement comes while Young is putting the finishing touches on his upcoming Raised on Country album, which he already revealed will include a few special guests. "There's definitely going to be a bunch of stuff that people are going to be excited about," Young promised to PopCulture.com. "Kane Brown, I've already talked about the fact that he guested on a song on the record, Brad Paisley, Riley Green ... I just really think that this album is something that's going to blow people away, and I'm really really proud of it. That's the kind of hallmark for me. We got done, and I listened to everything top to bottom, and I was like, 'This is what I wanted to make.'"
